Schools with the Most Suspensions:

The following is based on the total number of reported suspensions, not a suspension rate. We provide information about each school's enrollment for comparison. For example, at Susan E. Wagner High School, there was one suspension reported for every 5 students enrolled. At Pablo Neruda Academy, a much smaller school, there was one suspension reported for nearly every child in the school. Some schools not listed here may report an even greater number of suspensions relative to enrollment. Additionally, because suspensions are down overall, which is a good thing for New York City students, suspensions are also down in each reported category, making it harder for the public to understand where exclusionary discipline is having the greatest effect. During the 2014-15 school year, one-quarter of suspensions reported by IEP-status were redacted.

Borough	School Name	Suspensions			Enrollment

Range provided where the actual total has been suppressed by the DOE. Redactions represent between zero and nine suspensions.

Most Frequently Suspended Infractions:

The following ranking is estimated based on heavily suppressed reporting. Of the 44,636 suspensions in 2014-15, the DOE suppressed 58 percent of suspensions reported by infraction. Thus, the actual list of top infractions may vary.

Of Suspensions	Grade Lvl.	Infraction
6,165	6-12	B36 Altercation and/or Physically Aggressive Behavior
4,913	6-12	B21 Insubordination
3,978	6-12	B24 Minor Altercation (Previously "Horseplay")
974	6-12	B37 Coercion/Threats
587	6-12	B39 Intimidating or Bullying Behavior
332	6-12	B45 Reckless Behavior with Risk of Serious Injury

Serious infractions, for which the DOE requires a school to suspend, account for only 1.2 percent of reported suspensions. None of the most frequently suspended infractions are considered serious enough to require a suspension. Eliminating the option to suspend for insubordination would reduce suspensions in New York City by over ten percent.
